

Graceful Bobcat

By: Sky Tambor Wright
Grade Level: 5th

Bobcat, you are so graceful. Bobcat your short tail is swishing back and forth. Bobcat, your coat of tan is grand as the desert beyond my porch. Bobcat, your ears are so flat, you hear all the noise of the desert. Bobcat your claws catch all your food, including your dessert. Bobcat your coat is coated with black spots on your coat that coats your feline skin. The same coat that stretches across your beautiful slender face. Bobcat you are full of grace.

Bobcat your silky, marvelous, tan and black fur is beautiful covering your paws that are delicate and can climb any tree or fence. Grace as of a flying hawk on land and in mountains full of rock, so delicate but your footsteps do not cause them to fall. Your footsteps are so fast and swift that you want to climb to the very top of the highest cliff on the highest mountain in all of the Sonoran Desert. You can hunt prey so well with your piercing gaze. Then strike when the time is right with your razor sharp claws or clean white teeth. No bird will have any chance of getting away from such a feline feasting fate. Bobcat you are the graceful king of the desert who rules the mountains and desert.
